3 MINUTES SOONER

If you have ever gone through a fire, you are appreciative as I about the new fire alert monitor which enables Cameron firemen to reach fires 2 or 3 minutes sooner.

The Herald of September 4 had a picture of the device held by Asst. Chief Thomas Harwell. This is progress.

Most housefires go out of control in the first few minutes of ignition. Firemen getting there 3 minutes sooner are going to save a lot of houses, perhaps other buildings in the future.

NOW-NOW-NOW

During early high school days in the Midwest, we had a large, high-ceilinged apartment which was furnished heat by stokered coal. It was just before oil and gas systems went into residences in that part of the country.

One night, the heating system overloaded and flames shot through the flues within the walls and flooring into the upper floors. Our place in minutes was a cavern of smoke in a darkened building. The flames were within the walls, and the firemen arrived in time to see all the smoke pouring from the first level. If they had arrived a minute or two sooner, they might not have started the ax and hose routine so quickly on the brick structure.

They cracked upper story windows to draw out the smoke, sending men into the first floor to start to work on the walls, which were heavy plaster and a job to chop through. But the open windows on the upper floor drew the flames up the walls, particularly after they axed out openings to hose water into.

It was a mess 2 or 3 minutes beyond putting the whole place awash with water that put out the fire, but soaked things ankle deep which already had been fogged with smoke.

The fire damage was minimal, but what they did with the water and axes was what you might have expected if the Keystone Cops had been called in. What a mess!

Insurance covered some, but hardly all of it. It was an expensive 2 or 3 minutes. Nobody was in our place when things went up.

We spent six weeks elsewhere while they redid, rebuilt or replaced things. Mostly because of 2 or 3 minutes. What a mess!

Believe me, you may have opportunity soon to thank this fire department for these early warning devices.

PLANNING FIESTA--The Cameron Mexican Patriotic Committee, shown here with a queen and princesses, is inviting everyone to their annual fiesta on the fiesta grounds in Cameron on September 18. The fiesta will mark the 165th anniversary of the proclamation of the independence of Mexico. This is the 49th such celebration in Cameron.

Council Studies Budget

Members of the Cameron city council received copies of a proposed $469,824 budget to study before adoptio n later this month, at a special called meeting Thursday evening.

The new budget is larger than that of last year, which totaled $409,505.

The new budget calls for a 5 percent increase in wages for all city employees. City Sect. Buddy Fuller explained that increased valuations in the city will take care of salary increases.

Coming in for discussion was street paving, with a $30,000 item for street improvements. Mayor Pro-Tem Lawrence Zotz said cost for paving 70 blocks would be at least $53,872 and he said there was no way of paying for that in the city budget. Cost for paving 50 blocks would be $38,480 for one-inch asphalt.

If the city changed from 40 to 50 percent of valuations, an additional $171,879 would be raised. However, council took no action raising valuations. Fuller said valuations are now closer to 25 percent than 40 percent.

Other items increasing the budget are funds for the library and funds for purchasing more city equipment.

Council also discussed drainage problems that must be solved before paving can be started in the Green Addition.

Sum More Important...

Leon Jaworski, former Watergate prosecutor and Nuremburg trials chief counsel, has endorsed passage of the proposed Texas constitution in November.

"In some respects we are making ourselves a laughing stock in the rest of the country by not having a more modern instrument," the 69-year-old special counsel to the Texas Senate Carillo impeachment trial told the press last week.

He thinks parts of the proposed draft could be better, but Jaworski sees the need to get a new constitution in motion simply because it is better than the century-old document.

The Houston attorney was a member of the constitutional commission which drafted the document which went before the Texas Legislature which approved the November proposal in legislative procedures earlier this year.

Jaworski fails to understand opposition of some business groups to the proposal, particularly annual sessions.

"I think we ought to try it (annual sessions)," he said.

Jaworski, senior partner in one of Houston's largest law firms, sees the same need for a modern constitution that most except Governor Dolph Briscoe acknowledges.

The Governor is hedging on annual sessions, perhaps among other things.

This newspaper last week joined those urging Briscoe to give leadership from the Governor's office to assure public support for the document, the first in a century to be proposed for adoption in public vote. We long ago endorsed need for a new constitution.

We have agreed with Jaworski on a number of issues during the past decade. We are glad this man, this lawyer's lawyer spoke to the issue on the eve of yet another public service to Texas as special counsel in the upcoming Carillo Impeachment trial before the Texas Senate.

If one or two other major Texas figures would speak to the need, not the specifics, perhaps the Governor would convince himself and whatever opposition to this draft that the sum is more important than imperfections in its parts.

We congratulate Mr. Jaworoski for speaking out. Texas' ablest realize, to quote Jaworski, "we should be ashamed of having so archaic an instrument. Some of its provisions are just nonsense."

Texas deserves better than that.

Challenging The Charlatans...

A group of 186 scientists has signed a statement in effect condemning astrology as a con game. The group which includes 18 Nobel Prize winners says no scientific foundation exists for the ancient belief.

This is, of course, a problem for science. State of the science spectrum is by its nature "never done" and people want answers even if some mystical nonsense is the only way they can get them.

In our memory, we have seen avid religionists turn away from beliefs because of bitter experience. And where did they turn? To astrology. They didn't turn to science, because it was contemporary and incomplete and unfulfilling.

Astrology is old enough people can rationalize "the ancients knew as much as we do and probably a lot more," feeding their fantasies with the astrological signs, assurances, and promises of antiquity.

These scientists are heavy weights. And they say in this draft, published in Humanist Magazine:

"We wish to caution the public against the unquestioning acceptance of the predications and advice given privately and publicly by astrologers. Those who wish to believe in astrology should realize that there is no strong scientific foundation for its tenants. . .and indeed, there is strong evidence to the contrary."

Astrology magazines, newspaper features, and books are getting heavy acceptance and exposure. The past is apparently more comforting in legend and obscure practices than what is seen of present and future.

Astrology was developed in ancient times based on what then was known of the solar system. The amount of data accumulated just in the past generation is overwhelming by comparison to what the simple instruments of antiquity would have revealed to the ancients.

Science wants to provide information. People don't always want information. People want comfort. If astrology out of ignorance provides it, the scientific community will have to challenge the charlatans of the past time and again.

Venezuela Taking Over Its Vast Oil Industry

By Gerardo Inchausti

CARACAS Reuter--Venezuela formally takes over its base oil industry this week to close a chapter of foreign control characterized by intrigue, sharp practice, and coups de'etat.

President Carlos Andres Pegez will sign a bill nationalizing $5.184 billion worth of foreign oil assets on Friday in Congress, where deputies and senators hammered out details of the new law during 76 days of debate.

Under the law, concessions and property of the 18 foreign oil companies operating in Venezuela will pass to the state next January 1.

Thus, for the first time since a country doctor, Carlos Gonzalez Bona, stumbled across oil gushes in the western jungle in 1870, Venezuela, the world's third oil exporter, will have total control of its main industry.

The nationalization bill provides for compensation payments to the Dutch, British, and United States companies here and allows the state to continue cooperation with foreign countries for specific projects with congressional approval.

From Friday the companies--mainly U.S. controlled subsidiaries of Exxon, Texaco, and Mobil, plus Royal Dutch Shell--will have 60 days to agree on compensation terms.

The law allows them little option but to accept a government offer of $1.2 billion--the official estimate of profits they would have made if exploitation agreements had been allowed to run their course until existing contracts ended in 1983.

According to the companies own records profits remitted abroad since the pioneers began operating here 60 years ago are at least five times that amount.

They are not expected to wrangle over compensation.

"For too long Venezuela received nothing but trinkets for its oil," ex-president Rafael Caldera told congress recently.

His statement reflects the popular mood in Venezuela one of the charter members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC)--which has tried and failed before the wrest its $10 billion a year industry from foreign control.

From the very beginning Venezuela lost out in the struggle.

Dr. Gonzalez Bona and others tried to set up companies to tap the oil supplies they found in surface wells but they were quickly absorbed by John D. Rockefeller's growing empire.

A period of bla[illegible] interference from[illegible] United States followed.

Dictator Cipriano Castro was overthrown in 1908 after falling out with the U. S. New York and Bermudez Company and was replaced by General Vicente Gomez who signed away oil concessions at whim.

During his dictatorship which lasted until 1935 the U. S., Dutch, and British companies consolidated their positions here and began extracting the oil at the prices and quantities they needed.

In 1936 only five percent of the crude oil extracted by foreign companies here was refined in Venezuela. The state received a meager six U. S. cents per barrel.

Prices often fluctuated. Between 1950 and 1960 a barrel of crude averaged $2.27, but the following decade the price dropped to $1.93.

In 1960 companies paid Venezuela $2.20 a barrel and sold the same quantity as refined gasoline for $30 at the pumps.

Pressure from foreign companies, either through economic coercion or political manoeuvre, continued until recently, according to some politicians.

President Rumulo Galleogs fell in 1948 shortly after he decided to increase state participation to 50 percent. Venezuelan oil prices slumped for several years afterwards.

Montiel Ortega believes that dictator Perez Mimenez was ousted in 1958 partly because he planned to set up a Venezuelan petrochemical industry without foreign investment.

The military government which took over from Perez Jimenez increases state petticipation to 60 percent--and prices fell again.

It was not until 1970, a decade after foundation of OPEC, that Venezuela first began to gain some firm control of its oil resources.

"Low Down"

REP. RALPH S. REGULA (Ohio) ". . .My concern is to give attention to the fact that the provisions for building bikeway systems under the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1973 are generally going unused. It should be noted that of the 40 million Federal dollars available for bikeway construction in fiscal year 1975, only 23 States and the district of Columbia have requested a total of less than $25 million. But of this amount, the Department of Transportation reports that less than a mere $2 million was actually spent by the States for bikeways.

"This is appalling, when you consider that the bicycle is no longer only a child's toy, but is becoming a viable and significant mode of transportation and recreation, worthy of more attention, since the energy crisis is here to stay. . ."

REP. EDWARD I. KOCK (N.Y.)". . . I am introducing with Representatives Bella Abzug (N.Y.), Max Bacus (Mont.), Yvonne Burke (Clif.), Bob Carr (Mich.), Cardiss Collins (Ill.), John Conyers (Mich.), Bob Eckhardt (Texas), Robert Edgar (Pa.), Don Edwards (Calif.), Donald Fraser (Minn.), Gilbert Gude (Md.), Mark Hannaford (Calif.), Michael Harrington (Mass.), Ken Heckler (W. Va.), Ramono Mazzoli (Ky.), Claude Pepper (Fla.), Henry Reuss (Wis.), Ralph Regula (Ohio), Paul Sarbanes (Md.), Henery Waxman (Calif.), and James Weaver (Oreg.) the Urban Bikeway Transportation Act of 1975. If enacted this bill would provide $20 million annually for the construction of bicycle lanes, paths, parking and support facilities, and traffic control devices in urbanized areas--50,000 or more population. . . . .

"There are those of you who might ask, "Why more money for bicycles?" The answer is really quite apparent. First, the money now available, limited as it is, requires a diversion from highway usage, which some localities are reluctant to do.

Second, as we all know, the country is faced with a severe energy shortage. . . If the Congress is truly concerned about the fuel shortage and the need for different transportation alternatives, the bicycle provides a clean, quiet, economical partial solution to both of these problems. . ."

CRUMP'S GRASS ROOTS COMMENT

It's apparent that 27 states are not interested in spending highway tax dollars for Bike trails. So some congressmen look for a way to build Bike trails by new legislation; Urban Bikeway Transportation Act. To be funded with new tax money of $20 million annually. Have any of them considered applying the 'unused' tax dollars to the 'appalling' Federal deficit?

Reuters International News Briefs

BEIRUT

Lebanon hopes the Moslem fast of Ramadan, which began about Sept. 5, will set the cash registers ringing again by bringing back the Arab tourists scared off by all the shooting. Three rounds of recent violence, which may have cost as many as 1,000 lives, have had a near disastrous effect on the tourist earnings which last year made up nearly one-fifth of the country's national income.

LAGOS, NIGERIA

The removal from office of several high-ranking government functionaries since the coupe in Nigeria has caused uncertainty among the country's workers. Civil servants and employees of government-aided companies are worried because the purge seems to have only begun and no one is sure where the axe will fall next.

SAIGON

Government security forces and students have begun an operation to rid Saigon of the black markets and pavement coffee stalls that sprang up after the fall of the Nguyen Van Thieu regime four months ago. The cleanup is part of a campaign to bring the city back to normal, which has also seen the return of former officers of the ousted regime to live with their families here.

KYONGIU, SOUTH KOREA

A placid, tree-lined pond built by royal command about 1,300 years ago, has unexpectedly turned into a sort of treasure trove archaeologists dream about, giving an exciting glimpse of ancient life. Anapji Pond is a remnant of the great royal palaces that stood in Kyongju during the Silla Kingdom from 57BC to 935 AD. In 675 King Manmu ordered the pond to be built in the shape of the kingdom to commemorate the unification of Korea.

LONDON

A plan by the London Labour Party to end the centuries-old tradition of independent local government for the City of London, Britain's financial center, has brought howls of protest from the city's wealthy financiers. The one square mile city in the heart of the metropolis includes the Bank of England and the Stock Exchange and has a hand in much of the world's trade.

WEST BERLIN

West Berlin's Templehof Airport was closed to civilian traffic Sept. 1, turning the airport into a giant ghost development. The last two remaining airlines--Pan American World Airways and British Airways--are pulling out of Templehof to start operations at the new Tegel Airport in the northwest of the city. Tegel was built in five years at a cost of some 450 million marks.

SINGAPORE

A drain of professional and skilled workers overseas is plaguing Asian countries--especially Indonesia, where the government is taking strict action to prevent it. The Jakarta government has threatened to revoke the passports of Indonesian students studying overseas, mainly in West Germany and Holland, if they try to stay abroad.

Yoe Stomps Ducks In Grid Opener, 27-6

The Yoe offensive machine coupled with the Yoe fence stomped the Taylor Ducks Friday night 27-6 in the grid season opener at Taylor.

Scoring once in the opening quarter, twice in the second stanza, and once again in the third quarter, the Yoemen exhibited a power-packed offensive backfield.

Snaping in a time controlled offense the first touchdown of the season took 25 offensive plays and consumed 8 minutes of the opening quarter.

The Yoe offense rolled out 65 yards of which was culminated with a 3 yard TD pass play from QB Michael White to Ronnie Bennett. A mishandled snap from center was picked up by kicking specialist Joey Mondrik who ran the pigskin across for two points. Yoe led 8-0.

Yoe fence specialist allowed the Ducks only 34 yards rushing and allowed the ariel attack 44 yards. The Ducks ran 8 offensive plays.

A pass interception by Donald Komar allowed Yoe ownership of the ball on the Yoe 26 yard line.

In nine offensive plays the Yoe offense signaled Aaron Miller, junior, to carry the mail from 20 yards out. With 5:07 still remaining in the half, Miller loped and leaped his way across the magic line to give the Yoemen a 14-0 lead. Joey Mondrik tacked on the extra point, 15-0.

Taylor QB Bruce Turner again went to the ariel game before Joe Smitherman K.Oed him, causing a fumble which Smitherman also recovered.

The Yoe offense gained possession with 3:29 remaining on the Taylor 44 yard line.

Michael White launched his passing attack, marking a 38 yard completion to Greg Kelley on a 3rd down and 10 situation. Kelley scrambled his way to the Duck 5 yard line. Aaron Miller drove down to the 3 inch line with 25 seconds remaining.

On fourth an inch, Jafus White high stepped to 6 point territory through a gapping hole provided by Smitherman Marion Morgan busted through to block Mondrik's point after attempt.

Double A defensive dominance continued to plague the Ducks offense with defense only allowing 3 plays and a punt.

The final Yoe touchdown covered 45 yards in 12 plays in the third quarter. A screen worked to perfection in the series when Michael White tossed to Greg Kelley who followed his wall of blockers 29 yards with a cracking block by Frank Tena allowing the passage.

White kindled the offense with a dash around the right end for 11 yards. Aaron Miller on a second down and 2 from the 2 sniffed out the block and added insurance giving the Yoemen a 27-0 third quarter lead.

With 47 seconds remaining on the clock, Donald Komar called the signals, taking over for White who had completed 3 of 5 passer for 41 yards, one TD pass, and tallied 18 yards rushing.

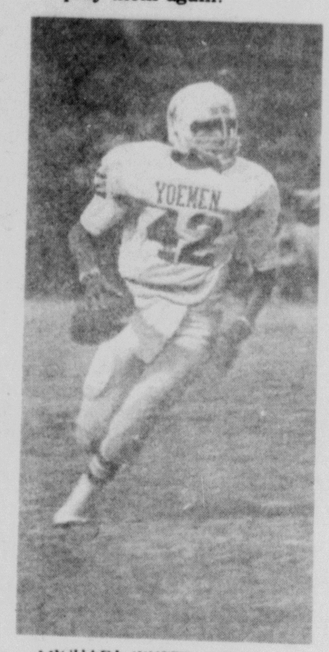
With 8:03 remaining in the opener the Ducks started a drive from their own 19 yard line. It took 7 minutes and 18 secons for the Ducks to do what had seemed impossible--break the Yoe fence.

There were four times that the Ducks were pinned in a fourth down situation; the final being good for 6 points.

All or nothing, as the Ducks had a fourth down and 2 from the Yoe 2 yard line. Bruce Turner on a QB keeper plunged in over the middle for 6. The PAT was wide to the right. The scoreboard doned 27-6, Yoemen.

One year ago the journey of the Yoemen began with a 22-12 win over the Ducks and ended with a quarterfinalist team.

The Taylor game ended with Bruce Turner, Duck senior QB saying, "I'll never have to play them again."



MICHAEL WHITE adds chrisma to Yoe offense.

Ducks JV Outscores Yoe By 2 Points

The Taylor Ducks slipped past the Yoe junior varsity and scored early in the second half to take the win, 8-6.

The Yoe junior varsity stayed in control of the battle when Bobby Burton returned the openi..g kick-off to the Duck 15.

Three plays later, Michael Knight got the call and dashed over right tackle on an 8 yard run to give the Yoemen JV a 6-0 lead.

The 6 points looked like a score that could stand as both teams battled within the 40 yard lines. It was a defensive battle that exhibited crisp tackling from both benches.

The Duck offense found a spark in Lester Zackery who safed a fourth down and 1 on the Yoe 9 yard - line. The next play featured another roll out by Zackery.

The Ducks were stopped again until the fourth down, when Zackery was called on again and broke the goal-line for 6 points. Zackery continued his workout and toted the mail on the extra point that gave the Ducks a two point winning margin with 9:04 remaining in the season opener.

EDITORIALLY SPEAKING

Policy Change Urgent

We in America have long basked in the security of an abundant agriculture that has produced ample food and fiber to supply our needs as well as those of a large part of the world.

Unfortunately, too many of us have fallen into the habit of thinking our horn of agricultural plenty is like the miraculous pitcher that never runs dry. This line of reasoning apparently stems from the naive notion that America's vast agricultural productivity has come about solely because of our nation's lucky combination of climate, soil, and limitless natural resources.

Any city gardener knows there's far more to it than that.

And anyone who has ever delved even slightly into the history of American agriculture knows that the colonists who settled our country had to discard the farming practices they brought with them and pioneer in new methods. Through the years of westward expansion, the move into new lands was accompanied by the need for new practices adapted to different soils and climates.

The history of American agriculture has been one of change directed toward "making the best better," as 4-H'ers say. American farmers have succeeded in doing this time and time again, toppling previous record yields with less and less manpower on less and less acreage. And they have been able to do it largely because of the vast amount of technology that has poured out of agricultural research.

But the technology that has accomplished miracles in the past is not sufficient to assure miracles for the future. New technology must be built upon that of the past, and agricultural research out of necessity must be a continuing process.

There are disturbing indications, however, that the urgent need for continuing basic agricultural research is not as clearly recognized as it should be.

The National Academy of Sciences has called attention to this in a recent report issued after a study of agricultural records of the United States and five European countries. The study indicates some "warning signals" that require immediate attention: (1) the rate of increase of total farm production is slowing, and (2) the possibility of increasing crop yields from additional fertilizer is diminishing.

Unless agricultural research finds even more imaginative ways of increasing productivity and unless population pressures are finally brought under control, the Academy says the results will be higher food prices and ultimate food shortages.

The report points out that federal and state support for agricultural research has increased on the average of almost 9% a year for the last two decades. But it notes that the emphasis of that support has shifted away from basic agricultural research and productivity studies to consumer- and environment-oriented programs.

Specifically, the proportion of university research funds spent on agriculture has dropped by 50% since the late 1950's. And yet, the report points out, if the same farming methods that were common in the 1950's had been used in the 1970's, prices for the same quantity of goods would have doubled or tripled instead of remaining relatively stable.

The report concludes, "There is an urgent need for agricultural research to receive increasing emphasis and much greater support. The future well-being of mankind could be at stake."

In the hope that Mr., Mrs., and Ms. Average Citizen will join in the discussion to bring about this needed change in U.S. policy, the Academy addresses its report: "To The Nation."

It's clearly a time to speak up and be heard.

When Philip V of Spain and Louis XII of France could not grow beards, their loyal subjects shaved theirs off too, so as not to embarrass their rulers!

AAA Cites Speed Limits For Reducing Deaths

Some 1,000 fewer lives were lost on the nation's highways in June of this year compared with June 1973.

The 20 percent reduction in traffic fatalities was reported by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) which also noted that June 1975 fatalities were a significant 1.4 percent below the same month last year.

The American Automobile Association (AAA) says the June 1975 figures mark the first time this year that fatality counts were below corresponding months for 1974. January figures were 5.5 percent higher than January of last year; February was up nearly 9 percent; March was 5 percent higher; April was up 1.5 percent; and May climbed to 7 percent above the same month in 1974.

NHTSA Administrator Dr. James B. Gregory cited the lower national speed limit as perhaps the factor most contributing to the drop. He anticipates a countinuing fatality reduction trend through the remaining summer weeks if drivers continue their apparent observance of posted speed limits and wear safety belts.

NHTSA uses 1973 as a base year for statistical comparison rather than 1974, when the energy shortage brought about changed driving habits and, therefore, a dramatic reduction in traffic deaths.

Locally, the AAA reports that the death rate in Texas was 335 in 1973, 245 in 1974, and 338 in 1975.

"It's apparent from these figures that a great majority of motorists in our state are not complying with the 55 mile-per-hour speed limit and other traffic laws," says William Coffey, manager, AAA Texas Division.

"Traveling 55 miles an hour not only increases the safety factor on our nation's highways," he continued, "but it also can significantly contribute to fuel conservation and help make 5 gallons of gasoline do the work of 6--the goal of our Gas Watchers' program."

AAA's Gas Watchers' campaign, designed to encourage voluntary gasoline conservation, was launched in January 1975 with the support of President Ford. Its objectives are to convince the motoring public of the need to conserve fuel, show them how to conserve, and measure results. The "make-5-do-6" slogan was selected because it reflects the national goal of reducing oil consumption by a million barrels a day.

"Reducing gasoline consumption in this nation is imperative if motorists are to avoid the possibility of harsh, mandatory controls on driving," Coffey said.

AAA has designed a 16-page Gas Watchers' Guide that contains a tankful of simple, gas-saving tips to help drivers meet the program's goal without hardship. The pamphlet, which fits easily into a car's glove compartment, also contains a mile'minder" chart for recording daily automobile trips.

A free copy of the Gas Watcher's Guide may be obtained by contacting your closest AAA office.

Lady Bird Award Due Hiway Official

Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson met with students of park administration and landscape architecture at Texas Tech University during a visit to Lubbock, made in connection with her annual Lady Bird Johnson Award for Highway Beautification in Texas.

Mrs. Johnson will present a plaque and her personal check for $1,000 to the first place winner and a $500 check to the runner-up in a special program Sept. 18 at the Lyndon B. Johnson State Park in Stonewall.

She established the award six years ago to recognize the maintenance man who does the best job of highway beautification in his area.

Legislators Return Money For Court System Use

Speaker Bill Clayton and two key committee chairmen today jointly returned over $50,000 in federal funds to the Criminal Justice Division (CJD) of the Governor's office to help aid the State's over-loaded court system.

Clayton Rep. Ben Grant, chairmar of the House Judiciary Committee; and Rep. Tim Von Dohlen, chairman of the House Committee on Judicial Affairs, returned the money after it had been allocated by the CJD to the committees to perform legislative studies.

The three legislators were united in their reasoning for refusing to accept the money, stating that although the money was badly needed by the House Committees to conduct interim study assignments, its major importance is to the local communities to help bring about a stronger and more efficient judicial system.

Earmarked by Congress to be applied by the states to areas of court administration and judicial reform, the funds represent the largest sum ever refused by the state legislature on the grounds that the local governments face greater needs than does the legislature.

"The funds will now be used locally to help to solve the court system's inability to deal with their increased workloads," Clayton said. "Hopefully, the application of these funds in this manner will speed up the entire judicial system so that a more swift, efficient, and sure form of justice will become a fact rather than a goal in Texas."

Clayton praised Von Dohlen and Grant for their leadership and fiscal awareness of the needs of the local communities in directing the return of the monies.
